

Figure 1. A map of the United States showing a color-coded distribution of a variable. The map uses a color scale from dark purple (low values) to bright yellow (high values). High values are concentrated in the Northeast, Midwest, and parts of the South, while low values are seen in the West and parts of the South.