

Figure 1. Topographic map of the Iberian Peninsula and surrounding regions. The map shows the elevation of the terrain, with the highest elevations in red and the lowest elevations in blue.

The map shows the elevation of the terrain, with the highest elevations in red and the lowest elevations in blue.

The map shows the elevation of the terrain, with the highest elevations in red and the lowest elevations in blue.

The map shows the elevation of the terrain, with the highest elevations in red and the lowest elevations in blue.

The map shows the elevation of the terrain, with the highest elevations in red and the lowest elevations in blue.

The map shows the elevation of the terrain, with the highest elevations in red and the lowest elevations in blue.

The map shows the elevation of the terrain, with the highest elevations in red and the lowest elevations in blue.

The map shows the elevation of the terrain, with the highest elevations in red and the lowest elevations in blue.

The map shows the elevation of the terrain, with the highest elevations in red and the lowest elevations in blue.

The map shows the elevation of the terrain, with the highest elevations in red and the lowest elevations in blue.

The map shows the elevation of the terrain, with the highest elevations in red and the lowest elevations in blue.

The map shows the elevation of the terrain, with the highest elevations in red and the lowest elevations in blue.